

The start of our walk was at the bottom of Twerton Roundhill; a location I know very well. I remember playing on the hill in my childhood.

- St Barnabas Church; a place where I spent a lot of time in my childhood. It was built in the late 1950s.
- I was in the brownies, the girl guides and the church choir.
- We went on Parish Outings by coach. I don't know who planned the trips, but they always went to interesting places. I remember trips to the Malvern Hills and to Bicton Gardens.
- One time we stopped at Sandbanks. It took me several decades to discover that Sandbanks is close to Poole in Dorset.

Whiteway Road to the south of Twerton Roundhill; the house closest to the hill is where my mother was born in 1932.

Two visits; One shows Emperor Hailie Selassie at the Roman Baths, the other shows him at the Rosaries in Englishcombe village.

THE EMPEROR'S "HISTORY LESSON"—Mr. A. J. Taylor and the Matron of the bathing establishment at Bath conducting the Emperor of Abyssinia and his entourage around the Roman baths to-day.

NEGUS AT BATH GARDEN PARTY: The Emperor of Abyssinia with Lady Barten, wife of Sir Sidney Barten, formerly British Minister at Addis Ababa, were among the guests at a garden party at "The Rosaries," Englishcombe, on Saturday. The Mayoress of Bath (Mrs. W. F. Long) and Dr. C. A. Marsh are also in the picture.

Kelston Roundhill from Twerton Roundhill.

- The weather was particularly grey and misty first thing on Sunday morning.
- The clouds had cleared by 10.00 when we were on the summit of Twerton Roundhill.

The City Farm was not here in my childhood. The location is just south of my secondary school; just south of the science hut. The classrooms furthest up The Hollow were called huts.

- Trips to Bath always bring back memories. A place might remind me of a person from the past. An image or a situation will remind me of an event. One memory dislodges another bit of data. The mind is a strange and wonderful device. I think that it works a bit like the internet. Throwing up more information than you need.
- These animals certainly looked very healthy on this north facing slope overlooking Bath.
- This was my first visit to Bath City Farm.

The River Avon looked particularly murky at this point. The former LMS railway line is overhead.

Kelston Round Hill

<http://www.nickcudworth.co.uk/product/kelston-roundhill-2/>

Two buildings in Kelston village. Numerous buildings had the same symbol on them. I liked the quirky entrance to these two cottages (right image).

The road in and out of Fairfield House. Over the wall is Partis College, adjacent to the footpath is Empress Menan Gardens.

Emperor Haile Selassie in Bath in 1936-1940. The first is an unknown location, the second is a picture of Fairfield House.

Two cars owned by Emperor Hailie Selassie. His "new car" is on the left.

EX-EMPEROR OF ABYSSINIA'S NEW CAR

BATH
IN TIME

The ex-Emperor of Abyssinia remains faithful to British cars. Last week he took delivery of a new Morris, which he received at the door of his home at Fairfield, Newbridge Hill, Bath. It was driven there by a representative of Bath Garages, Ltd., James Street, West, and was the second with which this firm have supplied him. His son has a Morris 8 and is frequently to be seen driving in the city and district. The car which the Negus has just acquired is a 10-h.p. De Luxe Saloon, and is a standard model.

BATH
IN TIME

THE DUKE OF HARAR, eldest son of the Emperor of Abyssinia, in the new Morris car which he has just purchased from Bath Garages, Ltd.

Approaching Kelston Roundhill. There was some steep hillwalking. This image doesn't show the steepness of the path we took. I think walking on the hill was steepest.

Two images showing Emperor Hailie Selassie; the first a visit to Stothert and Pitt, the second receiving the Freedom of the City. Both events are from October 1954.

Two round hills – two rosebuds:
Two views of the same rosebud in a garden on Newbridge Hill.

Hailie Selassie and his wife at Fry's Somerdale (chocolate factory).
The final image is a close-up of the Emperor.

